ALL AT SEA

"What's with the trick hat, Jinksy?" said Pixie as he watched Mr. Jinks adjusting a navy-type captain's hat on his head.

"What do you mean, trick hat?" snarled Mr. Jinks. "This is a genuine sea-going captain's hat! I happen to be the proud owner of a genuine ocean-type sailboat!"

"No kidding!" exclaimed Pixie. "When can Dixie and I go for a ride, I mean, sail?"

"Never!" snapped Mr. Jinks. "You meeces would be bad luck aboard my boat!"

"We would not either!" countered Pixie. "We could help you sail the boat!"

"Haw!" scoffed Mr. Jinks. "You miserable meeces would be about as useful as a cork anchor!"

With that, Mr. Jinks stalked out of the room.

Pixie looked at Dixie and said, "I like that! Inferring that we meeces — I mean mice — don't know anything about sailing! Why, one of my ancestors came over in the hold of the Santa Maria!"

"Sure!" retorted Dixie. "And one of MY ancestors nibbled his way across the ocean in the cheese bin of the Mayflower!"

A bit later, Mr. Jinks was down at the wharf, loading his gear onto his boat, the Catnip. His gear consisted mainly of a huge lunch. He brought enough food for ten cats, because he had no intention of going hungry.

So, he set sail, and soon he was headed out for sea.

"Sailing, sailing, over the, over the..." he sang, then stopped. "How does the rest of this song go?" he asked himself.

"Over the bounding main!" sang a couple of small voices to the rear of the boat.

Mr. Jinks cringed. "Oh no!" he groaned. "Not you meeces! How did you get aboard?"

"We came aboard in your gear!" answered Pixie. "We figured you would really need help, since this is the very first time you've ever operated a sailboat!"

"Miserable meeces!" screamed Jinks. "I told you I don't need your help! I think you just came aboard to eat my lunch."

He stopped. "Well, I'll fool you! I'll eat every scrap of it myself — right now!"

With that, he sat down and started cramming food into his mouth. He ate ten sandwiches, ten pieces of pie, ten apples, and ten glasses of milk.

Finally, he wiped his mouth and said, "There, you miserable meeces! You're not going to get any of MY food!"

"We didn't want any of your food!" Pixie assured him. "All we wanted to do was help you run your boat!"

"I don't believe..." began Jinks. Then he stopped suddenly as the sea began to get rough.

"I don't feel so good!" he groaned, and he collapsed to the bottom of the boat.

Pixie and Dixie looked at him. "You know what?" said Dixie. "I think he's seasick!"

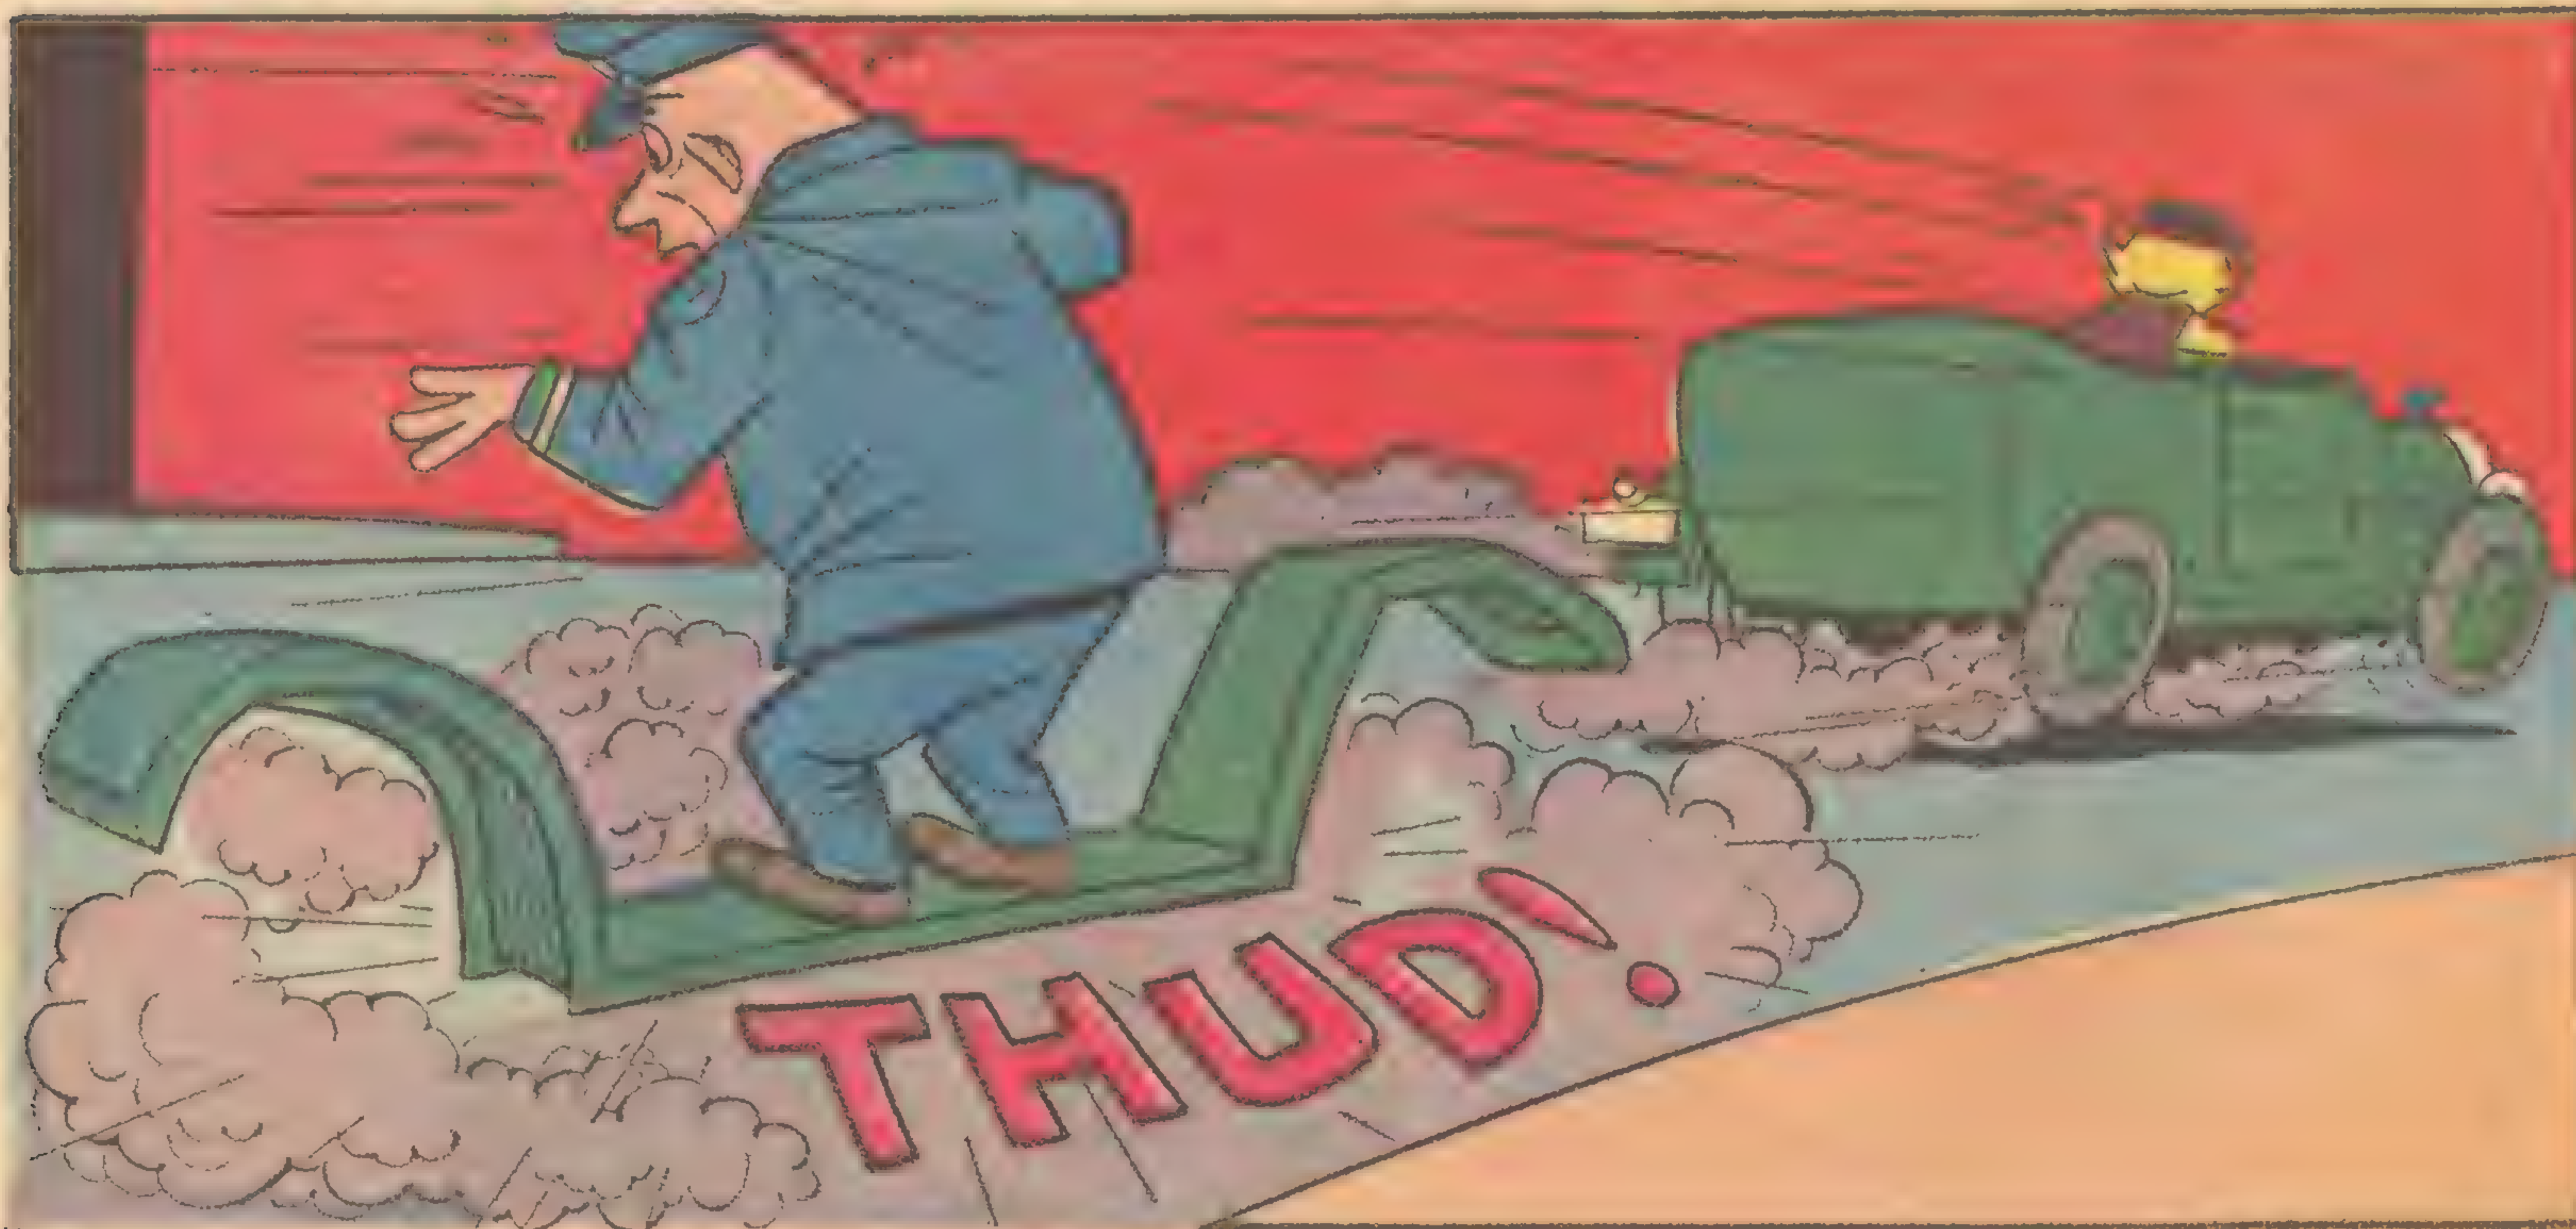

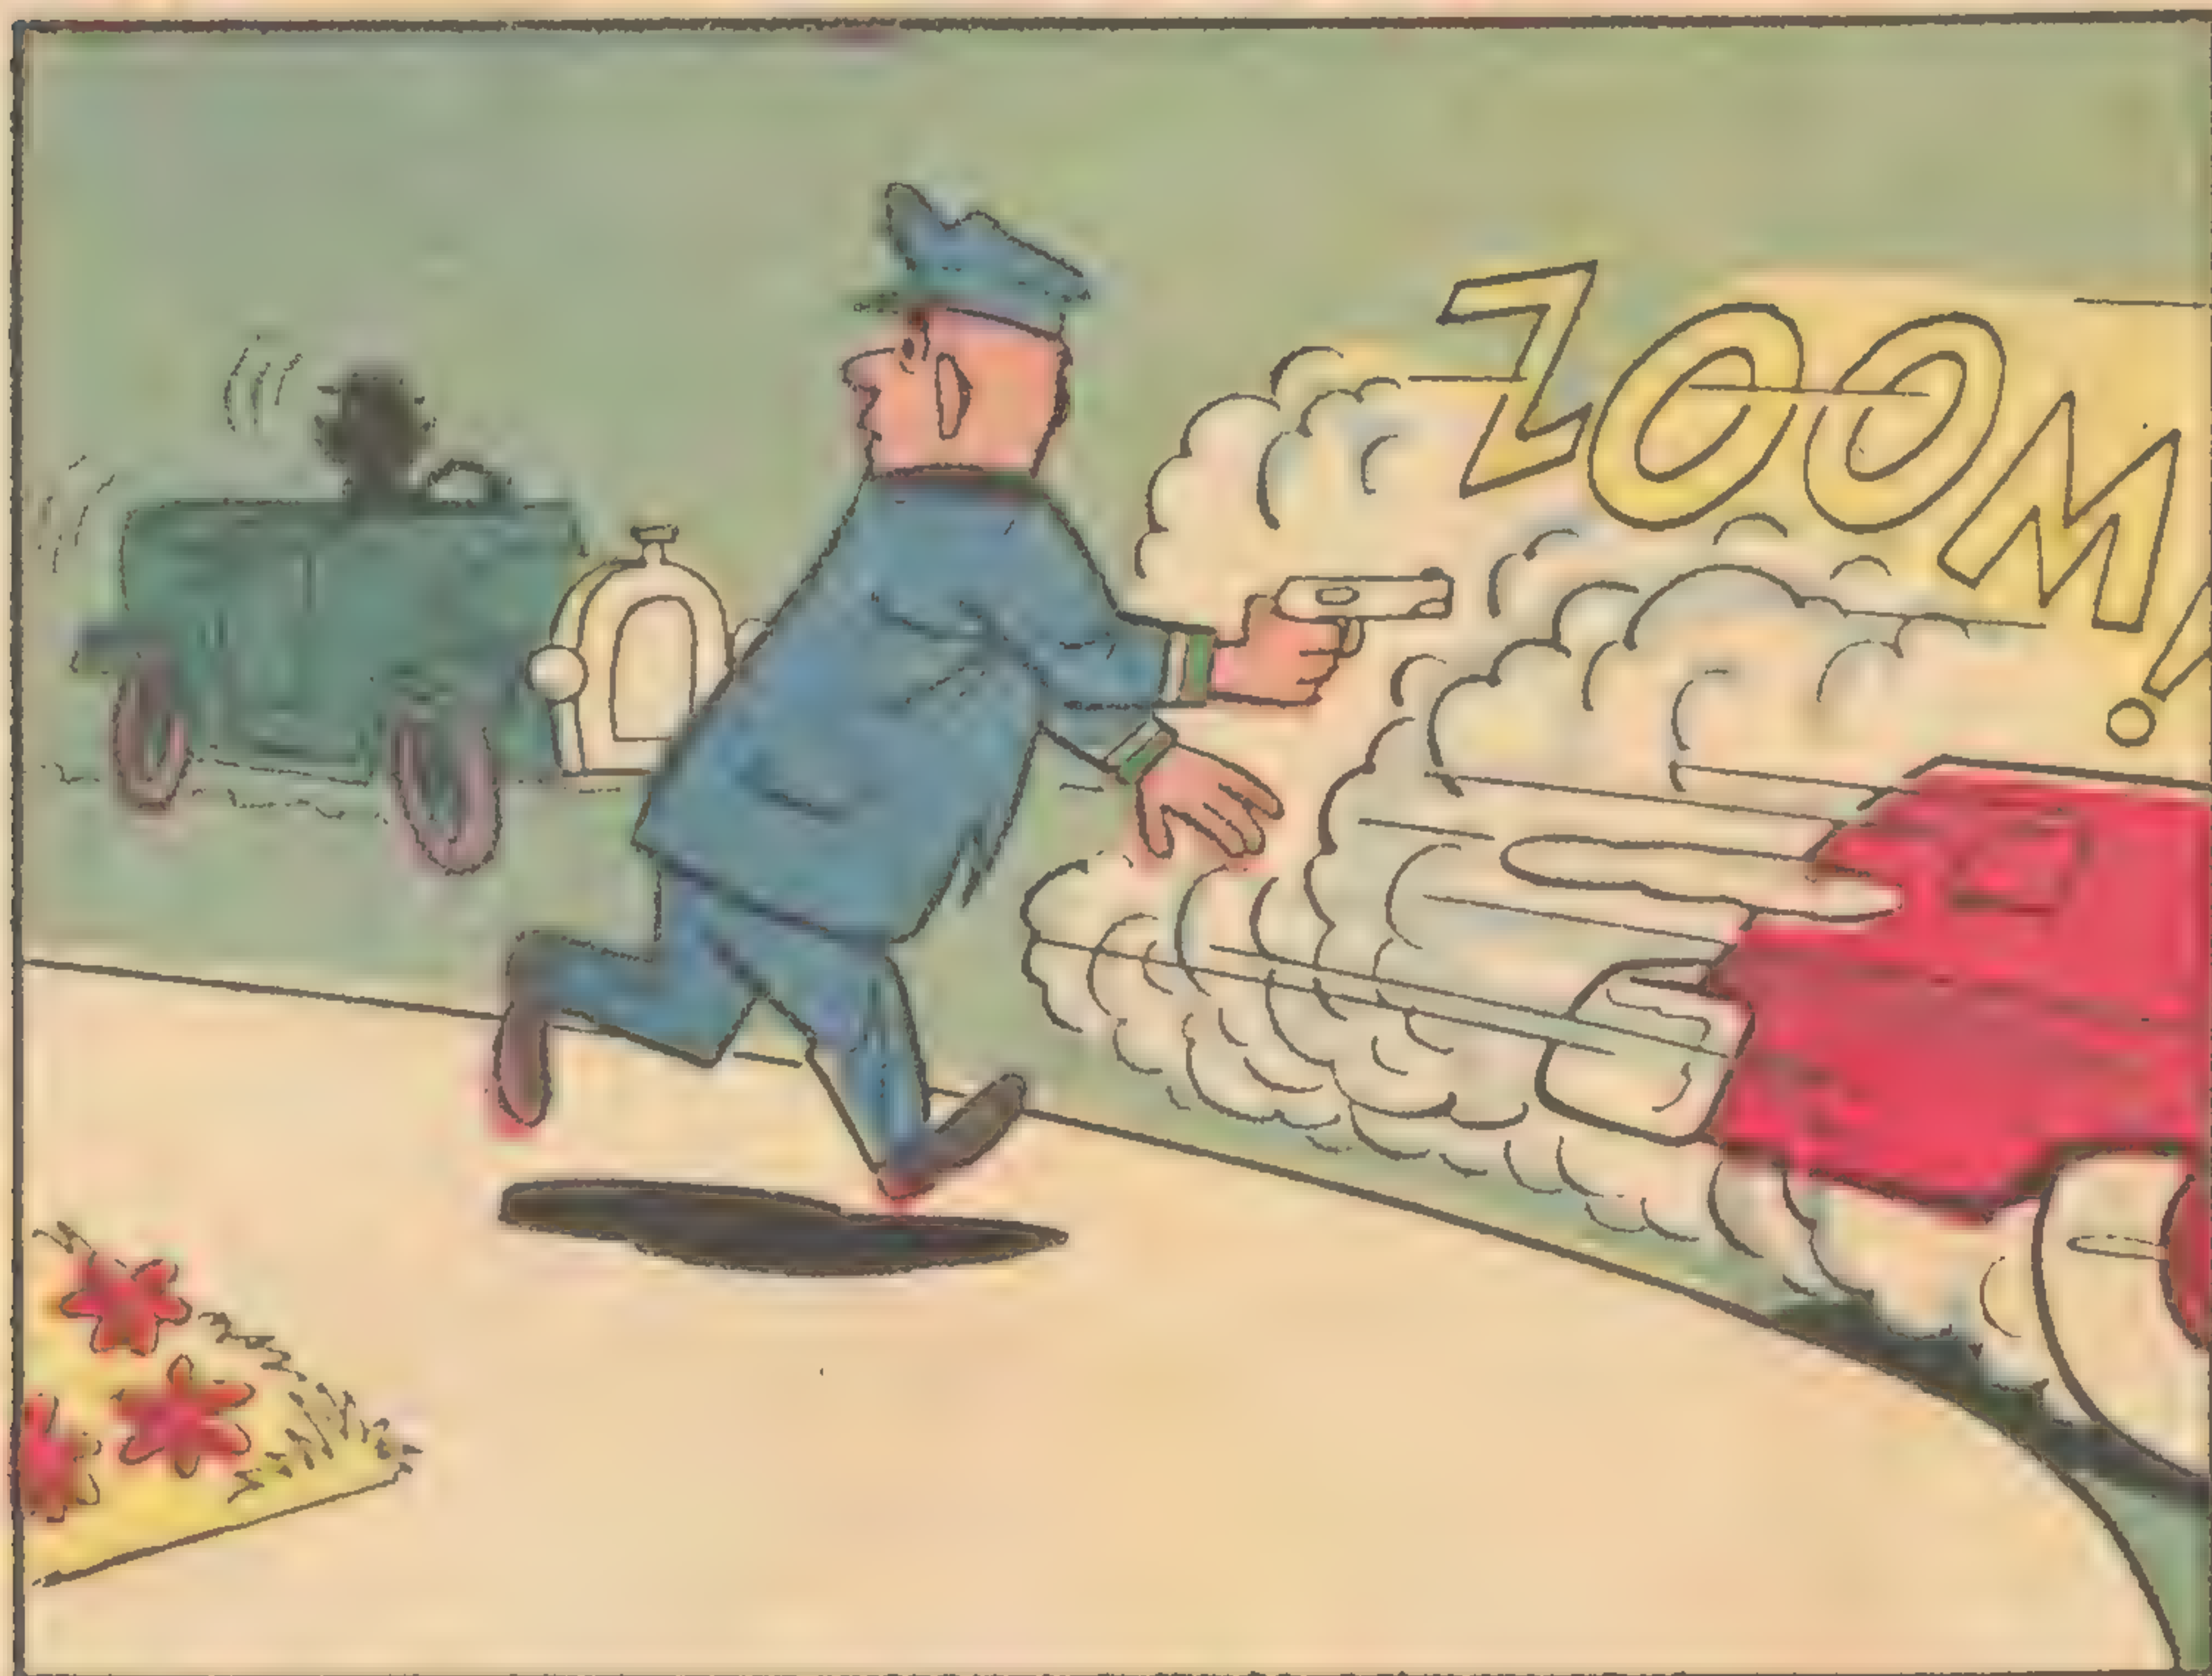

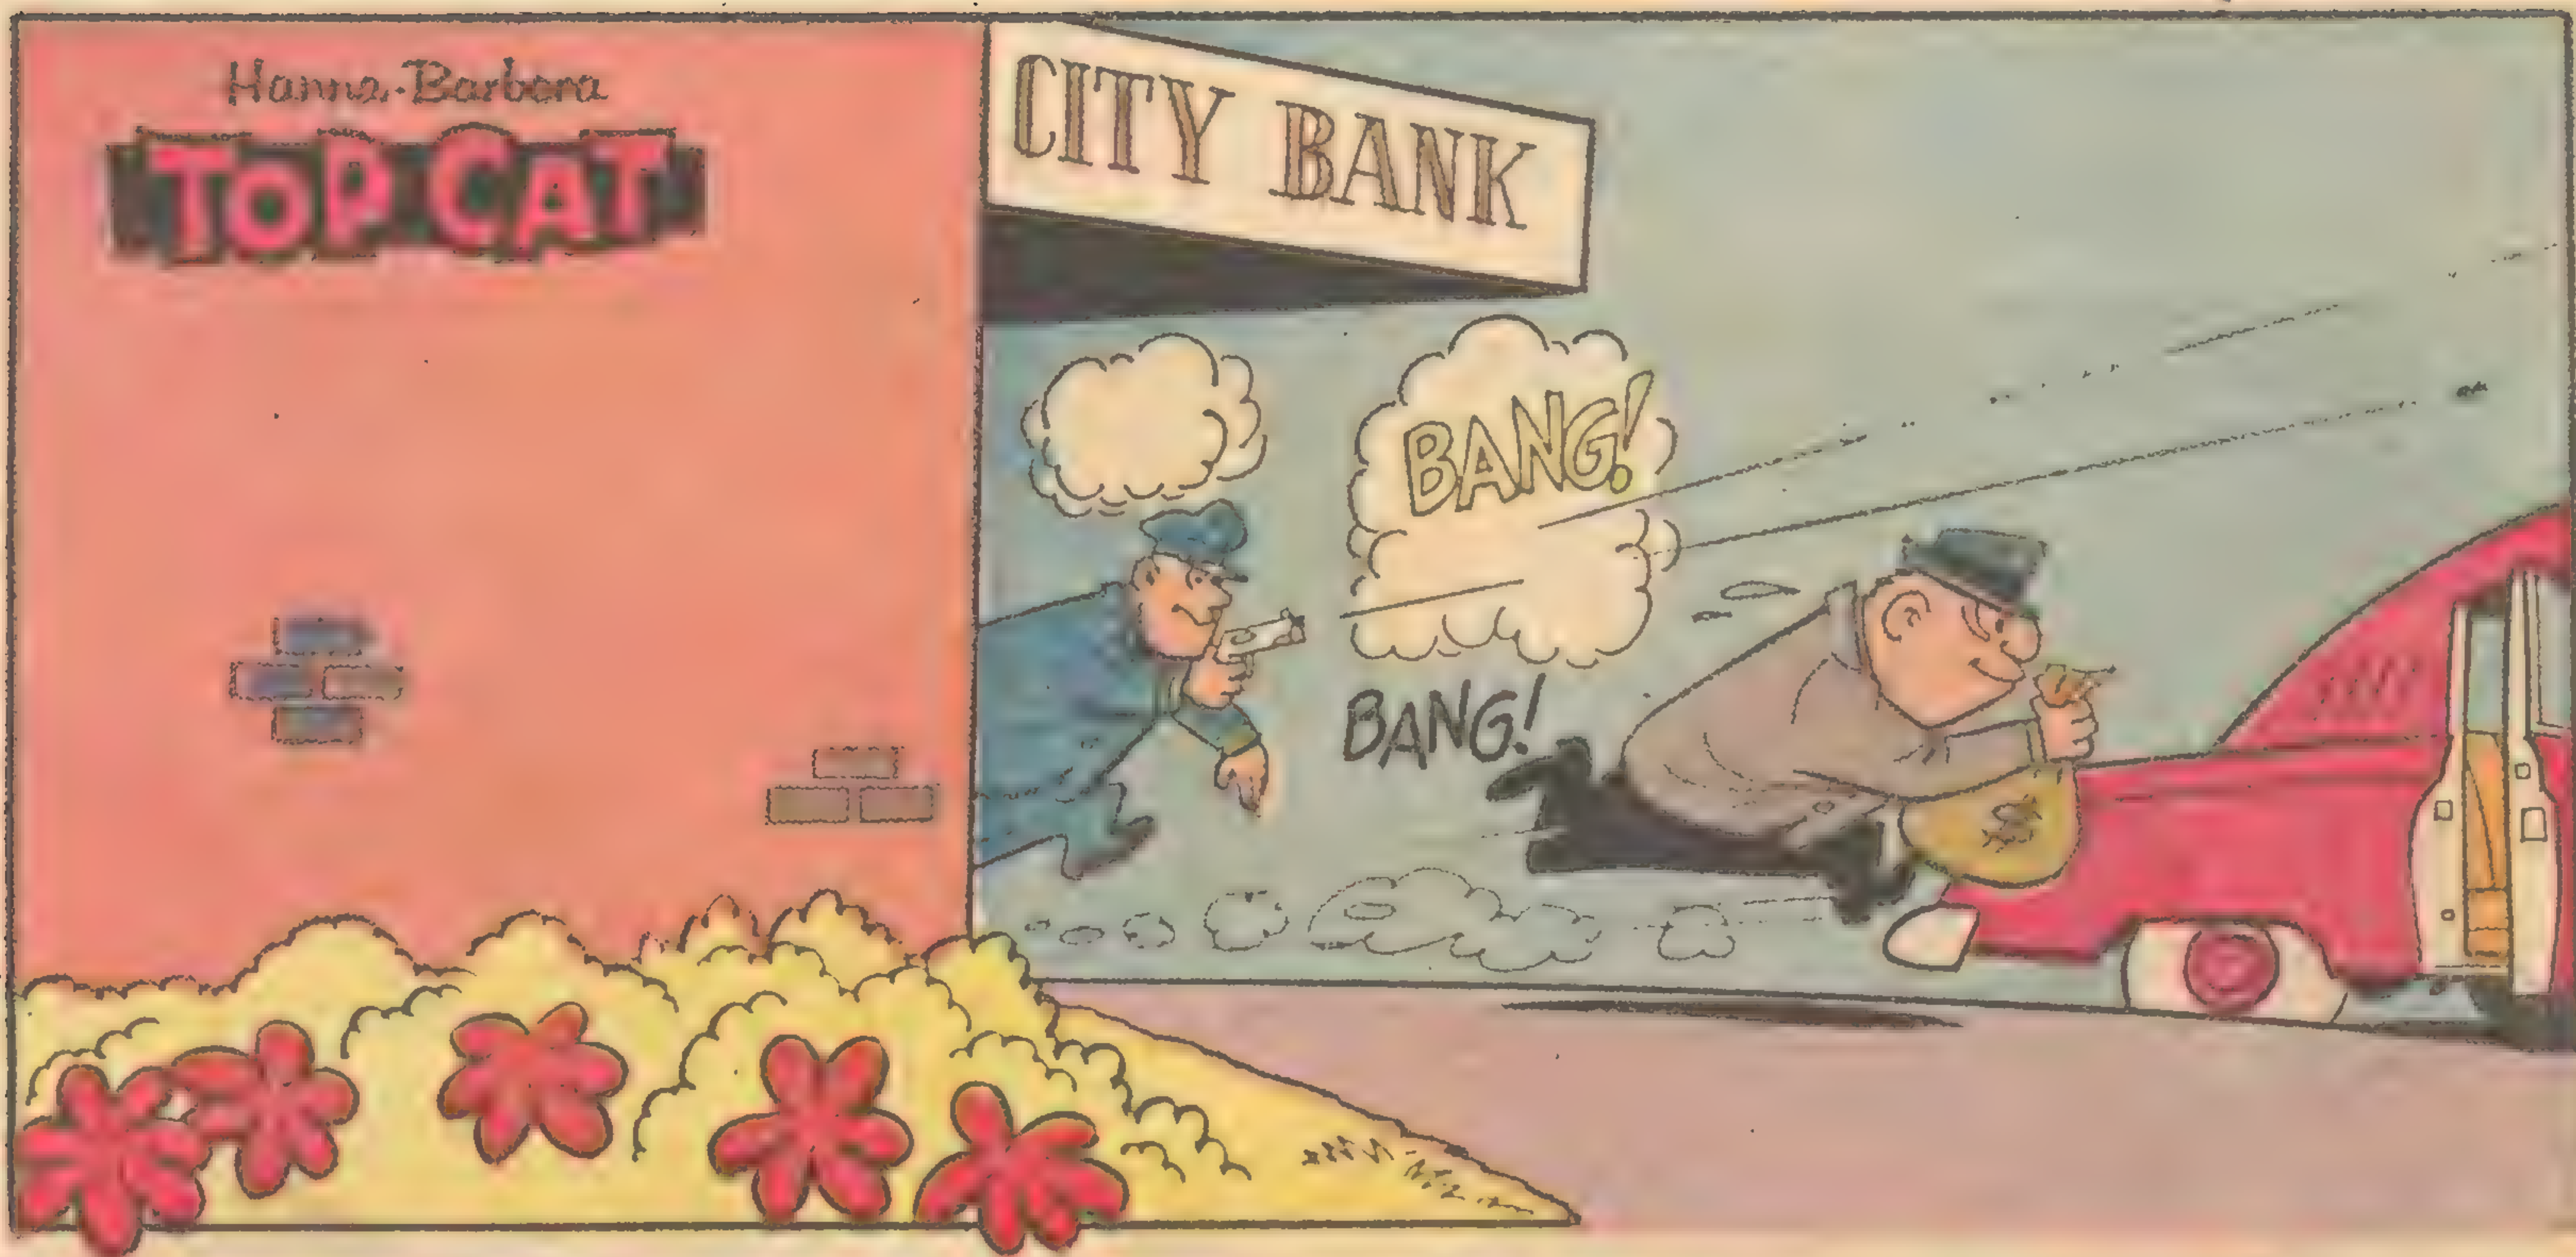

"Yeah!" said Pixie. "Who wouldn't be after gulping down all that food!"

Mr. Jinks was too sick to do anything but groan. He was too weak to handle the boat. The sea got rougher and rougher.

"You operate the tiller!" said Pixie to Dixie. "I'll handle the sail, and maybe we can get to shore!"

They finally made it. As the mice tied the boat up at the pier, Pixie said to Mr. Jinks, who was still lying in the bottom of the boat, "We're safe, Jinksy! Aren't you glad we came along to help?"

Mr. Jinks still couldn't do anything but groan, but he had to admit to himself that maybe if he had invited the meeces along in the first place he would not have gotten so seasick!
